WHEELING, APRIL 20, 1899.

No Senator Elected.

If there was any real hope left that the contending factions in the Pennsylvania joint assembly would get togeth er and select a senator before the expiration of the limit provided by law, it was dissipated yesterday, when the vote on joint ballot was without a change from the previous day. This means that unless a special session is called and is found able to agree upon a senator, Mr. Quay's seat will be vacant when the new Congress meets in December. The result is about what was expected by éverybody who has been watching the progress of the memorable contest. The opposition to Quay never yielded, just as it said it would not, and, while Quay lost strength toward the last, his most ardent supporters went down with him.

What the outcome of the matter will be remains to be seen. The trial of the ex-senator at Philadelphia is a factor of some moment in the situation, and it is a matter of speculation, should there be a special session in the future, as to whether or not Quay would gain enough to elect him, in the event of his being able to appear again as a candidate with the prestige of the vindication that an acquittal would give him.

Whether such a result of the trial would cause a withdrawal of enough of the opposition to give him sufficient strength or not, certain it is that the men who have been leading in the fort to bring about his defeat from the beginning, are not likely to be affected in any way. Their antagonism to Quay is placed on too many different grounds for the removal of one of them to materially alter the situation so far as they are concerned.

The War Beef Report.

It is a relief to know that the army beef investigation is ended and that the court of inquiry has begun the preparation of its report. The matter has been dragging along until the public has become surfeited with the scan-dal, if it may be called one. It seems to be pretty generally understood that among the features of the report will be the failure to sustain General Miles' charges that embaimed beef was sent to the army; that the trouble was due to damages in transportation and the tropical climate, which spoiled the beef soon after it was taken from the ice; that the canned beef is wholesome and nutritious, but "when opened and exposed to the tropical heat, became repulsive in appearance and unpalat-

If this is a fair forecast of these features of the report, it seems we are to understand that, while General Miles was wrong in the idea that the beef was embalmed he was right in stating that it was repulsive and unpalatable, when opened in the West Indian climate. In other words, that the contractors delivered it in good condition to the government, and if it became unhealthful and unfit for the soldiers to eat, as charged by Gen. Miles, the contractors were not responsible. The forecast of the report does not state if the court of inquiry undertakes to go any further than this and fix the responsibilty for any lack of care that may have caused the complants and the charges against the beef. That may not come within the power of the court, but if it does the report may prove of more than passing interest. It may turn out that the facilities at the seat of war were such that the proper care could not be exercised.

It is hoped that the court may succeed in showing just where the blame rested, or if it has found that the cause of complaint was unavoidable, that it can show it to the satisfaction of the critics and the public in general. If it is true that the court of inquiry is to censure officers who became aware of the bad beef being issued to the troops and failed to report the matter until after the war had closed, it will do one good thing even if it has failed to get at the real truth in the other matter.

A Case of Ignorance. The Parkersburg Sentinel should post itself on the news of the Wheeling street car strike before it indulges in such ridiculous assertions as the following, merely for the sake of making a petty and unfounded political point: Wheeling street car strike," the Sentinel, "threatens to spread to other organizations. The potters' unlon has taken up the matter, and tended moral and financial aid to the strikers. If other lines of organized labor become involved there is no telling where it will end. * * The working people are simply demanding some of the universal prosperity that is supposed to everywhere and free for every one for the

This is an exhibition of the grossest sort of ignorance, and shows how little the Parkersburg Sentinel knows about the situation here. Other labor organizations have expressed their sympathy with the one on a strike, but their own interests are in no way involved in the strike, nor likely to be. The Parkersburg paper ougt to know, if it does not, that the industries of Wheeling are enjoying prosperity and the employes are having plenty of work at good wages. It should know that employes in the mills of this city and vicinity have recently had their wages voluntarily increased, and are better satisfied to-day with their condition than they were in the days of low wages and half-time work during the period when the Sentinel's party was smashing protective laws and advocating depreciated laws and advocating depreciated money. Wheeling is doing very well. The street car strike is a matter wholly between the car company and its employes. There is no reason for spreading to other lines of industry, for the cause alleged by the Parkersburg paper doesn't exist.

Aguinaldo's Mental Gifts.

The American admirers of the Fillpino leader, whose intellectual attainments and capabilities have been in general applauded by them so enthusastically, are beginning to understand that they have been very much deceived in their estimates of him in these respects, quite as much as they were deselved in his ideas of what constitutes civilized government and warfare. It vill be recalled that in January Aguinaldo issued two proclamations of deflance to the Americans, which, judging from the brief abstracts of them published in the press dispatches, were regarded by his sympathizers in this country as evidences of his literary ability and highly commendable for their patriotic tone. This was thought to be a great point in favor of Aguinaldo's capabilities to govern, and to bear out the estimates which had been made of his greatness and his patriotism by some over-enthusiastic writers.

The full text of these two January proclamations have been printed recentfor the first time in this country, and those gentlemen who have been so profoundly impressed with Aguinaldo's qualities have opportunities to study them. The New York Sun makes some extracts from each in order to show that portions of the proclamations are characterized by the "affectation of direct, unconventional languege, a style," says the Sun, "not of an intelligent and able semi-savage, but of the leader of a revolution in one of the Spanish-American republics." These quotations from the proclamations are expressions such as might be used by a man of the stamp of Aguinaldo.

But there are two distinct styles of literature in the proclamations. One is the affected style of expression referred to, and the Sun clearly brings out, by quoting other extracts, that they are interwoven with a different sort of writing-the writing of "a man accustomed to using words denoting the most complex process of thought." The two styles are opposite and foreign to each other, and could not have been written by one man, who desired to leave an impression of individuality.

The text of the proclamations show that Aguinaldo is not the author of them, and that all the favorable comments in this country were wasted. The Sun makes this plain in the following brief comment, after quoting the extracts referred to:

tracts referred to:

A Filipino leader may be able to write about spit blood and liberty and independence who is incapable of conceiving the idea of deduction, and to whom it would never occur to employ such phrases as "fail to recognize" or "inexplicable attitude." A smart semi-savage may talk profusely about his own conscience, and yet be absolutely incapable of grasping the dee oxpressed in the phrase we find the two grades of intellectual capacity exhibited in the same place of writing, either two men have been concerned in the composition, or the one who wrote it is something of a humburg.

Pertinent to the subject of the Sun's article exposing the humbuggery of Aguinaldo's capabilities and his intellectual capacty, is the estimate given by Captain Coghlan, of the Raleigh, who has just returned from Manila with his famous cruiser. He describes Aguinaldo as a "half-breed, ill-informed, and not nearly so bright and capable as he is represented. The proclamations said to be issued by him are the work of his secretary-an Englishman." This ought to be conclusive evidence enough to suit the Aguinaldo poet laureates and champions up in the vicinity

Rough on the Doctor.

A very amusing story is current in London just at present concerning one of the most fashionable doctors, one, indeed, who has a very large practice. It seems that he has a telephone in his bedroom. The other night when the weather was particularly stormy and the eminent physician and his wife wer both fast asleep the telephone suddenl rang, and over the wire came the mes sage: "Please come round at once t Berkeley Square; Lady B— is ver ""

The physician uttered an ejaculation The physician uttered an ejaculation which was distinctly unparliamentary, and handing the transmitter to his wife, said: "Say I am out of town," which, like an obedient wife, she immediately proceeded to do.

The following afternoon the physician called at Lady B—'s house, and meeting her husband, exclaimed: "So sorry I was not at home when you rang me up last night."
"But were you really not at home?"

"Then, my dear doctor," spoke Lord B—, who is a bit of a wag, in the most carnest and sympathetic manner, "I must sympathize with you in your terrible misfortune. For I distinctly the your hedroom terrible misfortune. For I distinctly heard a man's voice in your bedroom talking to your wife."

The face of the physician is stated to have defied description, all the more as Lord B— hurrled off the moment he had said this without giving him time to utter a word in reply.

ABOUT TRUSTS.

A Great Aid When Conversation is About to Flag. The young man with wide ears had broken in upon the conversation tween the colonel and the congressman with a merry, penetrating "haw haw." "You were saying that the trusts are an unmitigated evil," he exclaimed, patronizingly. "Now, I can't agree with you. There are some things that make the trusts an unmixed blessing. They brighten our hours of leisure and make our toll less irksome. You see, there are so many of them they are bound to fit any occasion."

"Young man," remarked the colonel grimly, "you remind me of the parrot who—"

"Wait a minute. I'll just show you a case in point, offhand. Now, listen: Why does the parrot swear so much? Because she's probably heard of the cracker trust. See? It isn't anything great; merely one of these little promoters of conversation which make everybody feel more sociable."
"I'll take a cup of coffee, please," said the congressman in a tone of patient resignation.

Faild the congressman in a tone of pattent resignation.

"Coffee? That's as easy as any. Ahem! Ahem! You observe I cough twice, not that I really have a cold, but simply to make the example clear to you. Now I put my hand on my chest, and say 'I am afraid the coffee trust is missing something. I wish it would come around, and take charge of the cough-y feeling in my throat."

"There are times," said the colonel, scowling fiercely, "when the milk of human kindnesse" man, according to the Washington Star.

"That's too easy, even for a starter. You are going to say something about the milk of human kindness being so scarce on account of the milk trust. You ought to work around it a little more gently than that. You don't want to manage it so abruptly. Are either of you going to the theatre to-night?"
"I'd go most anywhere, to get away from here," growled the congressman. "Well, if there happens to be a ballet you can pick a girl with thin legs, and say you guess her calves must have been gathered in by the heef trust. I don't recommend that for indiscriminate use, but it shows the immense variety of ways in which the trusts have benefited modern conversation. If you see a woman who wears more diamonds than you like to see, you can say you fall to understand how all that carbon managed to escape the attention of the coal trust. If you want to compliment a woman tell her she is the only rival of the sugar trust. If—"Young man," said the colonel, savagely, "will you pass that mince ple?"
"Certainly. If the crust supply keeps on getting short I'll be tempted to think there's a pie trust. See? You can make lit work out just when there is it tell you, the trusts are a positive boon."

Mixed Relationship.

The Atchison, Kan., Globe, says that an old gentleman in that vicinity was asked who had dined with him on a certain occasion. "Well," he replied, "we were quite a family party. There was were quite a family party. There was my father's brother-in-law, my brother's brother-in-law, my father's father-in-law's brother-in-law and my brother-in-law's father-in-law." It was discov-cred afterward that the old gentleman had dined alone, and yet his statement is vouched for as being absolutely cor-rect. Who can untangle that marriage mystery?
